The General Council of the Six Nations and Delegates from different Bands in Western and Eastern Canada, met pursuant to notice.

At 11 o'clock, Fire-Keeper, George Buck, opened the Council, welcoming delegates and thanking the Great Spirit for preservation, &c, and adjourned at 1 o'clock for dinner.

The Council addressed by Chief Seneca Johnson, after Indian custom.

Secretary appointed.

Speech by J. Smoke Johnson, recounting visit to Ottawa on behalf of the Six nations. Adjourned till 11 o'clock on the 11th.

Council, 11th June, 1870.

At 11 o'clock Chief Seneca Johnson addressed the Council:—It is necessary to preserve Order in order to carry out the old rules and customs of our forefathers ; further, he asks patience, as he is a man of few words. What he is going to state is the voice of all the Chiefs on the Grand River.

A couple of Chiefs from Caughnawaga he wishes to mention, they are called the 7th Nation; have come from different parts, and are all loyal, and have come to meet the Six Nations.

It has always been considered that the Council fire of the Six nations was the head of other nations. He returns his sincere thanks for the presence of all including the Seventh Nation; you have come long way; you have left your wives and families, some of whom may be small and young. He thanks the Great Spirit for bringing you in good spirits and health. It is quite a number of years since we met together in General Council.

On behalf of the Six Nations, he hopes when business commences your minds will be quite right. The old rule is that your throat may be clear and draw your breath well and clear as your forefathers have done. If you have been afflicted or troubled, may your tears be wiped off and your eyes made clear.

Going over the old ceremony is the customary rule, task your patience. He hopes your ears will hear well. When your ears are cleaned out you will thoroughly understand what is going on. He hopes you will be patient, it is only a nominal ceremony, they are not prepared to go through the whole. You have travelled a long way. We will clean off all dust and mud. This tradition has been handed down from our forefathers, it is the old customary rule. Yet it is hard to remember all. We would like to go through all, but have not time. If you are troubled with thorns or briars in your feet, we will pull them out and make you rest easy while you remain here. We will try and make you comfortable, so that when you go home you may rest quietly. Brothers, he hopes you will be glad to see our good neighbours the Munisagurs, their forefathers had the privilege of saying this was the place of meeting for all the Indians. He only hopes he has wiped off your eyes, and while you remain you will see and hear well. He hopes there will be a clear sky and the sun shining over us. He considers the Council important and hopes we may plan out something for our benefit. The different bands have had different places of meeting, but he hopes this meeting will be for the benefit of our families. He hopes you will all work unanimously for the benefit of females and children. The token friendship was taking the arm as well as the hand, that it might be more firm and sincere. After shaking of hands the business of the Council will be stated.

COUNCIL, June 13th, 1870.

Chiefs and Delegates met at 11 o'clock. Roll called, all hands represented.

Rev George Blaker elected interpreter for the Ojibways, with power to express his opinions.

The Fire-keeper, George Buck, opened Council according to custom of the Six Nations, thanking the Great Spirit that delegates brought together, hopes their minds would be devoted to business, and ended by welcome, and declaring the Council open for business. Interpreted in Chippawa by Rev. George Blaker, in French by the delegate from Lake of Two Mountains, (Louis Kanerakentuate).

Traditionary records of Six Nation Confederacy were shown to delegates (wampum). Explanation given to delegates sitting around table where wampum is placed.

Chief J. Smoke Johnson. The position of the Confederacy of Six Nation Indians was the fire-keeper in his proper place, the door-keeper in his proper place, and the door properly tiled, yet the fire-keeper has noticed that a great monster has crept in; he finds he cannot eject the monster or whip him alone; he calls the delegates together to assist him in ejecting the imp or monster. It is said that the founders of the great Confederation of Six Nations, before the white man came, found there was nothing but murder and butchery between the different tribes, until the great founder, when he looked around the far West, seeing the smoke arising, he set to work and established peace. The Mohawks and the 1st and 2nd Oneidas on his right hand combined their different tribes and put an end to the warfare. While that great raid was going on, one tribe trying to exterminate the other, it happened in one of the leading tribes that had its young men nearly destroyed, when the leader found his young men and his strength gone he was melancholy and in despair; he went until he found the Mohawks and Oneidas, and they consulted together and agreed to promote peace and quietness throughout the land.

You will understand when this work was progressing, as the Mohawks and Oneidas proceeded in the good work, they came to the Onandaga tribe, the leader was almost inhuman, not only in appearance but in mind, ungovernable in temper and fierce to all, until he was persuaded by them. His appearance in body, a crooked sort of man, with uneven crooks. Yet the brothers persuaded him and he became one. They then prepared the home, had it swept clean and made the Onondaga the fire-keeper. He still occupies that position and keeps everything in order, and persuades his brethren to overcome any difficulty between them and bring in nothing to mar the welfare of the house.

The work proceeded from one tribe to another, the founders as they proceeded found other tribes until they got five, when they agreed to establish peace and union with each other, and left a great bird's wing with the fire-keeper to sweep the floor, keep clean the house and remove any evil that might creep in; and any evil he could not remove alone, he called on the tyler to spring his bow, and if they could not together, they called on all the brethren to assist.

The five nations uniting, the tokens showed when another nation stepped in, (a bar marked in), the policy of their forefathers was, when they were unanimous they were stronger. The wampum was handed down to posterity to show the treaties made by their forefathers. It has done a great deal of good, kept them together and brightened their eyes. They were shown and read at all large Councils, at River Credit and here. This is why their wampums are read, they are the tokens of treaties made by the founders of the Six Nations Confederacy. The stronger they became the more treaties they made. They made leading chiefs, one head or leading chief, Tekarihogea, put a crown on his head to denote his power. There was a head leading chief, and a warrior chief by him, that everything might be done in order.

The last wampum has marks of human beings, it was a token like a house with a family united, it was a token to be handed down to posterity to show the friendship established by their forefathers; it was like binding the whole house together.

The token of the large wampum is for all the chiefs, that they may keep their treaties good. If any chief went under or over any treaty made, by their forefathers, it was like as if he went into a bush with his crown on, it would be torn off. It was further stated if they broke through the rules they would come to ruin. That is why they made the fence so strong to keep them from ruin.

The chieftainship was a birthright belonging to a certain family, the explanation of them then is the bandage like a fence, if any Chief or Indian broke through any rule or broke faith, the crown placed on his head would be torn off. When it came off, it was a degradation to the family, yet by birthright some of the family would succeed; it was always feared they would come under the rule of their white friends, they would then be in the bush and understand nothing. The Wampum having two men standing one at each end, represents the first meeting or treaty with the British Government. It represents the Six Nations and the British Government. They stand on their own rules, which they laid down, the British Government gave a check Wampum to confirm what the Six Nations had done in their rules and declarations. The marks worked on the wampum shows the British and Six Nations had united by treaty. They were each to have their own way ; not hurting their customs or rules or regulations. If the Indian had his bark canoe, let him have it, let the British have his large vessels. The British gives the wampum to confirm the rules and regulations of the Confederacy. The wampum now held out is a token of all tribes from east to west. It confirms what has been done by the Six Nations. All the nations where this wampum has been, have combined with the ideas expressed by the Six Nations. It is a wampum in the hands of other tribes besides the Six Nations. The one now held up is a speech from the different bands who were in friendship with one another, it confirmed all that had been done, it showed there was no disturbance not handed down to posterity to show what they had confirmed. I hold up another wampum worked with white beads, it denotes peace. Any tribe having united, pass this to show and hand down to posterity, to show their friendship; grasping their arms it showed the strength of their friendship, even a pine tree falling could not break the friendship of united bands. This wampum applies to all—it combines all Indians. The work denotes a dish with a beavers tail in it—it is full. It was when game was plenty, no knife was allowed for fear it might cut some brother—they eat with their fingers, all was harmony and quietness, all was free to use. You will see a great many marks on the wampums, one has 22 marks, this came from the Ottawas, they united to show their appreciation of the Six Nations. It is to be kept and handed down to the smallest of the nation. It is a memory, and they hope it may continue for ever. Another wampum given by the Socks Indians—they were not well served; but when the Socks found the Six Nations were in trouble, they joined and helped to defend the country; they did what they could to protect property. After the war, the Socks started to go home, but left the white wampum. It is a wampum of peace which we shall always remember. The wampum now held is one given to the Six Nation Indians by John Brant, he was then superintendent. After a while he wished the Six Nations to become as whitemen; then rules were shown to him, to show how he had broken the rules. He was convinced and repented. He delivered this wampum to the Six Nations, saying he had erred. His friend Oneida Joseph, did the same.

Council adjourned till 10 o'clock, to-morrow.

GENERAL COUNCIL, June 14, 1870.

Pursuant to adjournment, the Council met at 10 o'clock, a. m.

Firekeeper, Chief Buck, opened the Council, wishing well to all delegates and thanking Great Spirit for their preservation. The six Nations were glad to see them and wished them nothing but peace and happiness.

Smoke Johnson. I congratulate my friends assembling in the Council, call upon all to thank Great Spirit for our preservation we all owe it—it is but right, and may he direct us in our Council and in all our doings, and may we arrive at proper decisions. Firekeeper states as far as we went last night, we go on and finish the reading of the wampums. He calls upon the delegates to look closely and remember. He calls attention to the explanation. Council opened.

Chief Wawanosh, arose and said, his band and other bands had received a letter saying there would be a General Council at the Grand River, on the 10th June, for the discussion of Indian affairs. His people were very anxious to attend, and hurried to get away to be present. They came on the 10th of June, and were told they would be informed on Saturday what subjects would be discussed. Saturday came and they were put off until Tuesday. Tuesday came and they are not informed ; a great many delegates, are anxious to know when the subjects for discussion are coming up. He does not object to the Six Nations reading their wampum; but give them the subjects that they may retire to discuss them.

Chief J. S. Johnson, has no doubt he is tired from his speech, and there are others, yet a great many of his friends wish to see their records or wampum belts. The belts were taken to Ottawa and satisfied Mr. Howe that the Indians had certain rules, he compared them with his book and found they were sympathizes with Chief Wawanosh and those who have left their homes and are impatient, but must yet be patient, as the Six Nations must explain; he makes it as short as he can. When the Confederacy was originated the lofty trees were planted, it signified that these bands of friendship extended from East to West; we compare these records that they may be united still. The two bands on the belt held up signifies union, and some of the bands had a link, which was the motto of the brethren, if any tree should strike the union, but it would never break, the brothers might fall. And that should keep us united, and strengthen us; it was the motto of our forefathers, they are swept away, yet it still stands. The first belt held up represents the influence of Lower Canada, St. Regis, Lake Two Mountains and Caughnawaga, the three are combined in this belt. You have heard that the tribes below, call themselves the seventh nation. This belt represents their Confederation, the long mark is the path or rule of their action which governs them. The belt now held with the figures on one end represents the British Government, on the other end the Seventh Nation, and in the middle the Six Nations, the line in the middle represents the rules by which they were governed differently, when their Confederacy was in treaty. The first short belt represents the enjoyment of our brethren below, in the centre is a mark which signifies a dish, which we hope may always be full with precious meat to enjoy; the bias marks represent strength, or like braces to a house; the third represents in the house or Confederacy, the fire-keeper's place there; the last belt you see represents our Lower Canada brethren, in having their fire-keeper placed. St. Francis, St. Regis and Caughnawaga, the Six Nations. The other belt combines us all, and is the last belt and combines as well the other mottoes. On the first belt that was shown, (it is the oldest one,) when the Confederacy was completed, you see the superior chiefs are represented in white, the subordinate in dark; it is to show that its warriors and chiefs are combined. The variegated strings represent both combined. This is the wampum which binds all of the Indian race not only our own people but all of Indian blood.

The notice was to give the explanation without going into details. The last two or three strings are used as messengers, when it arrives we may rely upon the truth. You have heard explanation of variegated strings, they are different numbers and sizes. I may directly explain the colored ones. There was a time when evil practices went on, murders many. The largest string explaining that the chiefs would take that string and console or pacify the parties, that their animosity might be removed, the other strings represent anything from other tribes, or any war; when they come with colored strings or black, it gives alarm of importance. You have our foreign neighbors in open day an armed body of Fenians invaded our country, if they had succeeded these would have been the beads to warn us to defend our country.

I have now given you as direct a statement as I could shortly, having left out a great many details and this is the end of this long explanation. In finishing up, this represents the imaginery spirit, We all know that misfortune has at times fallen on our respective tribes, while the chiefs and people grieve over their sorrow, let them raise in their spirit the lofty pine tree, which will uplift its roots, and a swift current carry all-ruin, misfortune, arms and weapons under its roots and to the unknown, after place the tree as before and all is cleared away. It is the same now, if we sin let us wipe it away by repentance, make ourselves clean once more in the eyes of our Creator, and let all be right again. If we always follow those pleasant things which please God, we must come to his presence at last.

His friends insist upon rendering up properly. Our forefathers foretold that if the Indians were indifferent about their interests, there would be a day when the head would have to roll westward, which would mean a removal to other lands. We might be permitted to remain there, but be humiliated, we would be obliged to look for a tree to shelter us, we might find a great elm, and shelter ourselves under its roots, we may die there and our bones be there, sometime our enemy might come and contemptuously kick these bones, and draw blood. If we are now indifferent to our interests humiliation might follow. But if we defend our rights we shall be respected. Now is the time for us to act, and remember my friends the foresight of our forefathers have foretold many things and the prediction has come true.

This ends the Indian preliminaries and customary doings.

The Council adjourned for dinner at one o'clock.

After dinner the speaker of the Six Nations Indians introduced to the delegates their visiting Commissioner, J. T. Gilkison, Esq.

The visiting superintendent thanked them for the kind manner in which they received him, he sympathized with them, hoped their deliberations would be conducted properly, and he should be happy to forward to the Government the result.

Chief Wawanosh. Ever since we came to Grand River Council we have found nothing carried out according to our views. When we left home we were under the impression that every one, warrior or chief, had a voice; we find it different. In all public gatherings among the white people they organize their meetings by appointing a chairman and proceeding to business. We object to a chairman being appointed without a vote of the whole Council.

Rev. George Blaker. We came here to have a General Indian Council, we did not think it necessary to bring our superintendents with us, nor did any of the other bands do so. We did not think it necessary to have a white man among us, or presiding over us.

Chief W. J. Simcoe Kerr, addressed the Council, regretting there should arise a discussion whether a chairman should be appointed or not. In all public assemblies for transaction of business it became necessary. The business is important, let the discussion cease.

Nicholas H. Burning, asks if the majority of the people present are in favor of the new act or not.

Delegate Fish, from Walpole Island, says in reply, that is just the reason why a chairman is required to find out.

St. Francis delegate, says he wishes the new act put to one side.

The Six Nations interpreter states that the Six Nations refuse to allow a chairman to be appointed, in consequence of which the delegates leave, but return upon Six Nations consenting to have a chairman.

General Indian Council, June 14, 1870.

Mr. W. N. Fisher, delegate from Walpole Island, moved, seconded by P. Crow, that G. H. M. Johnson, be elected president and chairman of the Council.

Rev. George Blaker, moved, seconded by Jonas Henry, that Chief Nicholas H. Burning, be elected president and chairman of the Council.

Rev. John Sunday, addressed the Council, calling, to mind the necessity of consulting wisely together, and his visit to England when the authorities there received him with courtesy and kindness and granted his request, to allow the Indians to remain where they were. He was sorry when he heard of the present Act having been passed, but called upon the Chiefs to consider it carefully, reject what, is bad and keep what is good.

Rev. F. P. Chase; addressed the Council, saying, it is well to take the view of Rev. Mr. Sunday with regard to considering the new Act. He called to mind the General Council of 12 years ago, we then declared when the Indians came under control of the Canadian Government, efforts would be made to encroach upon them and drive them away; it is now coming to pass—the late Act shows it. Let the Indians show the Government they have mind and are no longer children. He hopes this Council will do good and assist the general welfare of the people.

J. Henry addressed the Council, saying, their delegation were instructed by their people, to have the new Act entirely done away with.

P. Crow, Alderville, addressed the Council, urging the rejection or amendment of Section No. 1.

He objected strongly to the whole Act, as contrary to Indian welfare.

To His Excellency, SIR JOHN YOUNG, Bart. P. C., G. C. B., G. C. M., G. Governor General of Canada,
& c., &c.

Your Excellency,

We have the honor to state that the annexed papers marked "A" and "B" show the result of a General Council of the Indian people of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, represented in Council by their properly chosen delegates.

The Council is strongly under the impression that the present and increasing position of the Indian people of Western Canada, and the large amount of money in the hands of the Trustees for Indians, desire at your hands, as the Representative of our Gracious Queen, different legislation from that shown in the last act of Parliament affecting Indian interests.

The Council demands that proper consultation with the Indian people should be had, when any Act of Parliament is proposed which may affect them, and not left to subordinates who have no true knowledge of Indian advancements or requirements.

The Council, although suffering from a deep sense of injustice, has not entered upon the discussion of the late Acts with anger or any hostile spirit; but with earnestness and reason, as the objections raised to the several paragraphs will plainly show to your Excellency.

Trusting in your Excellency to remove all dissatisfaction from the minds of Her Majesty's most loyal allies.

We have the honor to be,
W. J. SIMCOE KERR,
Tekarihogea,
President & Chairman.
